

COALITION
Traditional Values
SPECIAL REPORT

Exposed: The Next Phase Of The Homosexual Agenda

Homosexual activists are now pushing for legalization of public sex in restrooms and parks; abolishing ‘age of consent laws,’ and legalizing prostitution.

The City of San Francisco quietly revised its laws governing massage parlors in December, 2003. The new regulations remove massage parlors from oversight from the Police Department as a vice issue and place these sex shops under the Department of Public Health.

The change, in effect, helps legalize prostitution in San Francisco. Prior to the change, individuals wishing to operate massage parlors had to apply for a license from the police. Prostitutes, sex offenders, and others with criminal records were denied licenses.

The new law also removes restrictions banning sexually suggestive ads and loosens restrictions on massage parlor trainees.

This lax policy against prostitution is part of an overall agenda that is being pursued by homosexual activist groups like the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force (NGLTF) and the Gay And Lesbian Advocates And Defenders (GLAD).

In May, 2004, the NGLTF announced a new alliance with the Woodhull Freedom Foundation (WFF), a sexual liberation group that seeks to abolish laws against prostitution; overturn “age of consent” laws protecting children from adult sexual predators; and seeks to legalize homosexual sodomy in public restrooms and parks. The WFF also seeks to ban all abstinence-only sex education materials in our nation’s public schools.

According to an NGLTF press release (May 28, 2004), this new NGLTF/WFF coalition will focus first on studying America’s “archaic” sex laws and will then file lawsuits to have these laws overturned.

According to the NGLTF, this will include laws against “public lewdness, but which are routinely misused to persecute and prosecute people who participate in non-traditional forms of sexual expression.”

The WFF lists as one of its primary goals: “Decriminalization of safe and consensual alternative sexual expression, including public sex and sex work.” “Sex work” is code for prostitution.

The Gay And Lesbian Advocates and Defenders has already successfully overturned a Massachusetts policy governing how police are to treat homosexuals caught having sex in public restroom stalls. The homosexual group sued the police for harassment against a homosexual male, identified only as John Doe. Doe had been convicted in 1998 for lewd sexual conduct in the woods near a rest area. When police spotted Doe near a public restroom in 1999, they ejected him from the park.

GLAD claimed the police were unfairly targeting Doe for harassment and violating his constitutional rights. A Middlesex Superior Court judge then issued an injunction barring police from removing Doe from rest areas.

The new policy imposed on police says that “socializing and expressions of affection” are not considered sexual conduct and such conduct is not illegal unless there is a “substantial risk” that a passerby can observe the conduct.

According to Boston Herald columnist Margery Eagan, the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court also issued an opinion on the issue of homosexual sex in public restrooms or parks. According to Eagan, “Our SJC now says public sex is not illegal unless there’s a good chance passers-by will see it. Discreet sex, straight or gay, is thus OK whether at rest stops or secluded beaches, state parks, or state offices or in minivans with steamed-up windows and tinted glass parked anywhere from the garage at Boston Common to the meters along Beacon street. It's an enlightened view, it seems to me." (Boston Herald, 3/4/2001)

The effort to overturn public sex laws is not limited to Massachusetts. In March, 2004, Fresno police arrested 40 men in California and charged them with lewd and lascivious behavior for having sex in a public restroom. A judge, however, said that charges may be dropped because no heterosexuals were targeted by police in the sting operation. Police observed numerous homosexuals engaging in sex orgies outside restroom stalls. Eric Schweitzer, a lawyer who represented many of the homosexuals in the case, was pleased with the judge's ruling. "What consenting adults do in private is their business, right? They're simply being arrested for things that don't amount to a crime at all." (Fresno Bee, 3/13/2004)

Slowly, but surely, homosexual activists are overturning laws against public sex, based upon such questionable reasons as harassment or discriminatory treatment. The judge in the Fresno case may be oblivious to the fact that heterosexual males seldom engage in sex orgies in public restrooms; nor do heterosexuals typically engage in sex acts in parks.

Yet, the new paradigm being promoted by homosexuals is that if a person can't see homosexuals engaging in oral sex in a restroom stall, it isn't violating anyone's rights. In fact, one pro-homosexual attorney argued on "The O'Reilly Factor" that if a person happens to look over the wall into the stall where sex is occurring, he has violated the right to privacy of those engaging in sex.

Bill O'Reilly interviewed criminal defense attorney Bruce Nickerson on his March 16, 2004 show on the Fresno sting operation. According to Nickerson, "...If you bend down and look over [to see homosexual sex taking place in a restroom stall], you've violated their privacy." Nickerson says a closed bathroom stall is "a private place in California under California law." When O'Reilly asked him if he approved of homosexuals having sex in a public park, he answered that it would be okay "...where you reasonably don't expect to offend anybody."

The Gay Financial Network says that Bruce Nickerson is a crusader working to change laws dealing with public sex. Nickerson describes himself as a bisexual and "the state's best toilet lawyer." (Gay Financial Network, 5/29/2000) A legal web site called Vault, says that Nickerson's main goal in life is "to help reshape the way that the law deals with gay men and women. Specifically, this means that Nickerson defends gay men and women in undercover sex stings and lewd conduct cases."

'Age of Consent' Laws Targeted, Too

In 1972, the National Coalition of Gay Organizations issued a "Gay Rights Platform," that included the following demand: "Repeal of all laws governing the age of sexual consent."

This effort is being pursued aggressively now by homosexual groups all over the world. In Hong Kong in June, 2004, a homosexual group called Civil Rights for Sexual Diversities, issued a demand that the age of consent for homosexual sodomy be lowered from 21 to 16. The group says this law is "archaic" and must be abolished.

In Kansas in 2002, the ACLU demanded that the Kansas Supreme Court strike down a 17-year prison sentence for an 18-year-old homosexual who had sex with a 15-year-old boy. The case was brought by the ACLU's Lesbian and Gay Rights Project, headed by homosexual attorney Matt Coleman. The ACLU claims that the boy's sentence would have been far less had he been sexually molested a girl instead of a boy.

In England, a homosexual group known as Outrage! has led the fight to abolish all age of consent laws. In 1999, for example, it issued a press release titled: "16 is not enough! We want total equality!" According to John Hunt with Outrage!: "Winning an equal age of consent will be an important advance. But it will still leave many other homophobic laws unchanged. ... We will not settle for anything less than TOTAL EQUALITY." Outrage! demanded: "... the repeal of ALL discriminatory sexual offences—buggery, gross indecency, soliciting, and procuring," meaning sodomy, public sex, and prostitution.

Homosexuals Seek To Abolish All Moral Laws

U.S. Civil Rights Commissioner Mary Frances Berry is a member of the board of the Woodhull Freedom Foundation. In the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force press release, she noted: "Many individuals are unaware of the sex laws in this country and how those laws are used to selectively persecute individuals simply for their private and consensual sexual expression." This expression, of course, includes having sex in public restrooms, engaging in prostitution, and sodomizing little boys.

TAKE ACTION

Send this article to your pastor, community leaders, school teachers, friends, and neighbors to inform them on the latest goals of the homosexual agenda.

Distribute TVC's special reports, including "The Overhauling of Straight America" and our Homosexual Urban Legend series. These reports can be downloaded from TVC's web site at: <http://www.traditionalvalues.org>. TVC, 139 C Street SE, Washington, DC 20003; 202-547-8570.